It's snowing today. It's windy outside and it looks really cold.

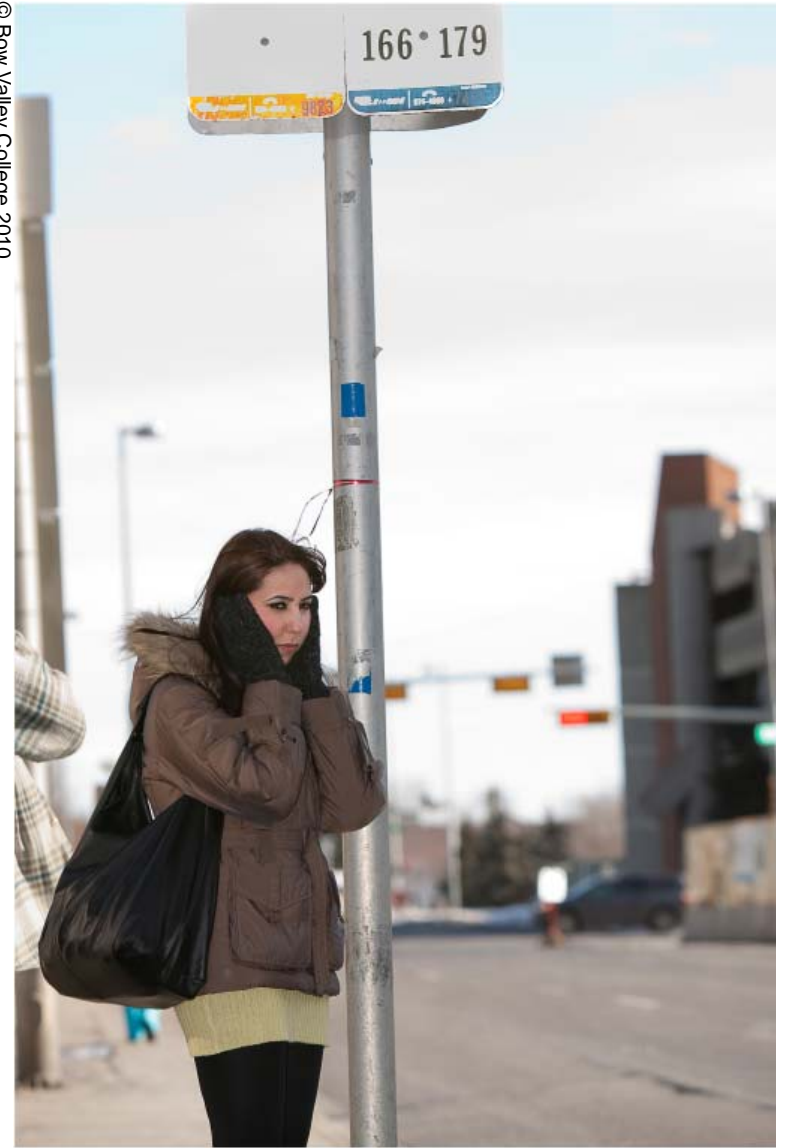

Mursal wants to stay in her warm bed, but she has to go to school.

She walks to the bus stop and waits for the bus.

Mursal is very happy to be warm. She is happy because she has friends to help her.

She forgot her toque at home. Her ears are numb.

Finally, the bus comes.

Mursal's classmates tell her to see the nurse. Maybe she has frostbite.

At the break, Mursal tells her classmates about her burning ears.

Mursal gets on the bus.

She shows her bus pass to the driver and sits down.

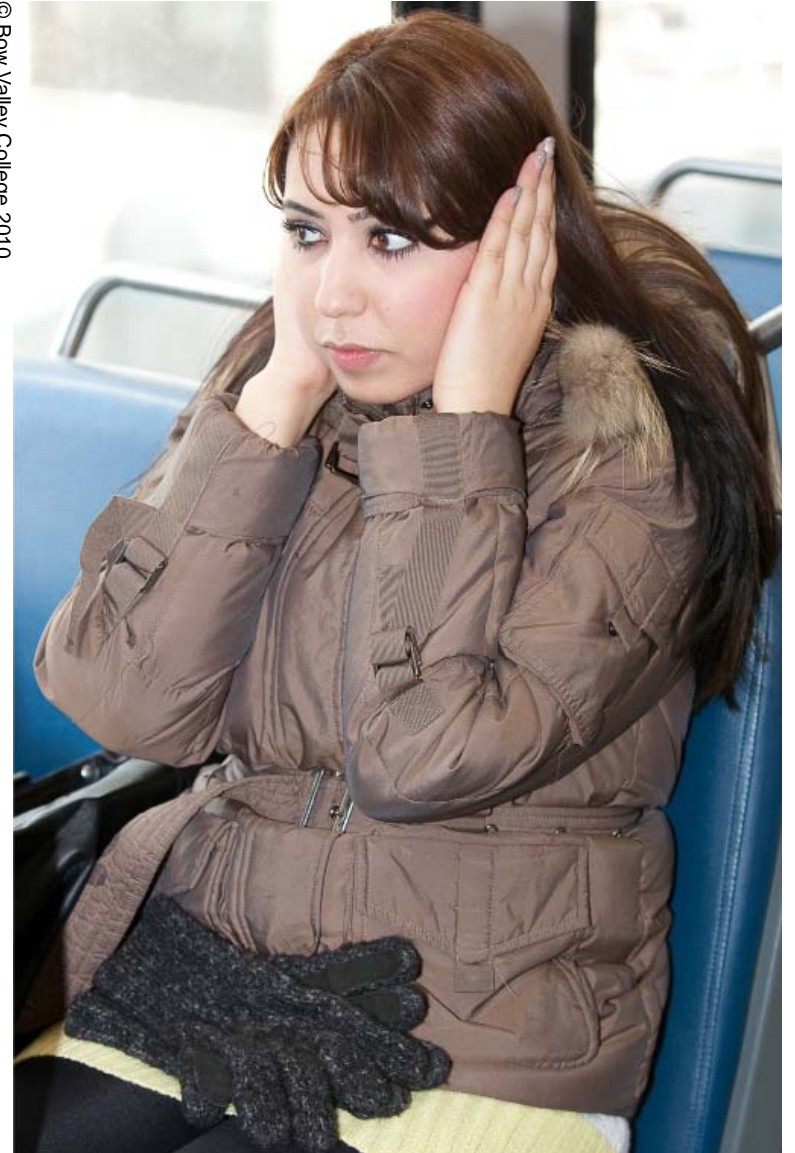

She is late, but everyone is happy to see her.

Finally, Mursal gets to school.

Mursal takes off her gloves and puts her warm hands over her ears.

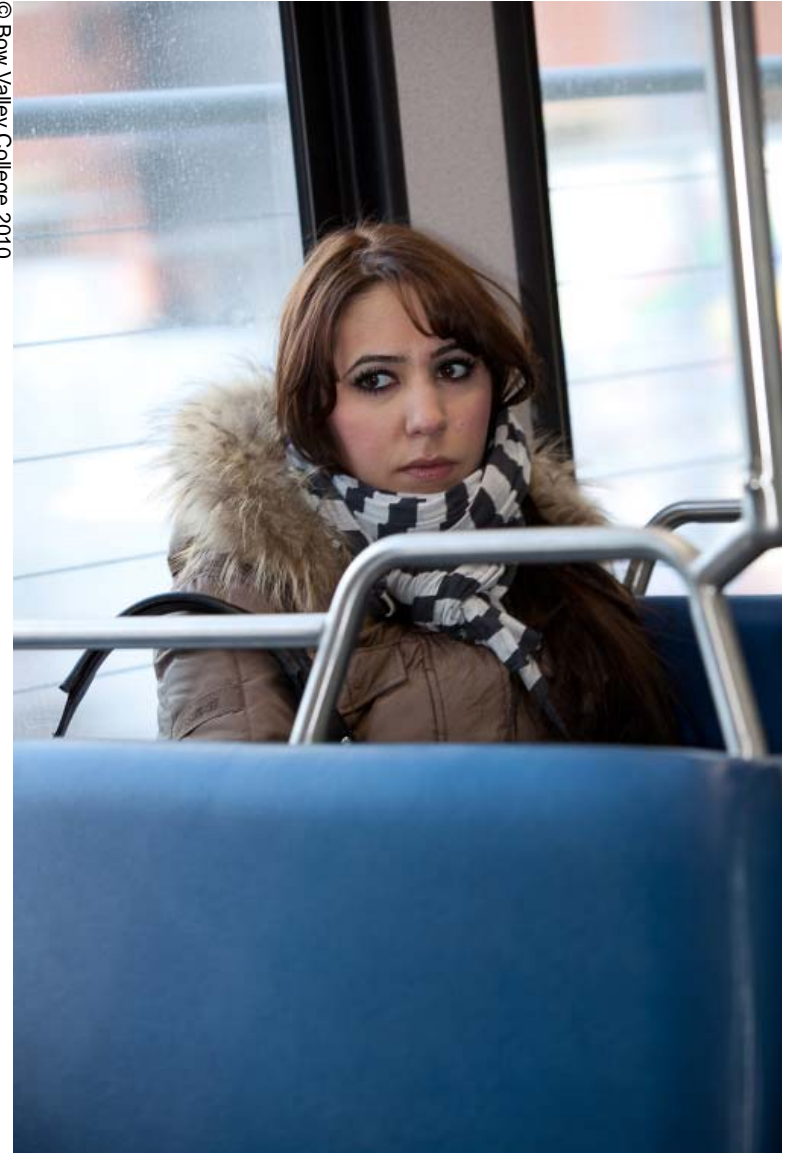

In a few minutes, her ears are warm, but they burn.

Mursal gets on the train and finds a seat.

Mursal is happy because this train has empty seats.

Mursal rides the bus to the train station.

Before Mursal gets off the bus, she covers her ears with her scarf.

Finally, another train comes.

She has to wait for a long time. Mursal's ears are cold again.

When Mursal gets to the train station, she gets off the bus and waits for the train.

Finally, the train comes.

The train is full, so Mursal has to wait for the next one.
